

YOU HAVE IT!

Oprah has It! Jennifer Aniston has It! Aston Krusher has It! Tiger Woods has It! People refer to "it" as though "it" is some special gift that God handpicked his "favorite" souls to have. I want to dispel the myth behind this thing called "it."

Most often we hear people describe people who are highly accomplished or those who are upwardly mobile as having "it." The "it" separates us because no one can explain "it." It is presented as something exclusive for those who exhibit something that is phenomenal that we can't see or understand, but we know that it is there. Did you get it?

When these so-called "special people" walk into a room the "it," although invisible, seems to occupy more space than it needs; and sometimes unintentionally suffocates the fragile, malnourished souls surrounding the possessor. "It" captures seemingly everyone's attention and leaves its witnesses mesmerized by its owner's presence and inner beauty. It's the warmth of their smile. It's the light in their eyes. It's each effortless step they take. It's the freedom of their speech. They elude the untouched truth that is in many of us.

I have another view about what "it" is, and who has "it." I believe that the "it" is the passion and courage to be accountable to create the life that God sends us to live. The "it" is the internal power to genuinely forgive ourselves and others. The "it" is the strength to take risks and transcend barriers. The "it" is the answer to the call of our souls to reign above all the negative experiences that most of us allow ourselves to be tortured by.

You have "it", my friend. Everyone has "it." I battled within myself for years wondering if I had the "it" to manifest bigger opportunities. As I shared in Chapter 1 Human Uniqueness: Preparing for the Fight in my book There Is More Inside, "I had to overcome the first hurdle of learning how to stand within myself. My second greatest challenge has been to understand and answer the question, 'Where do my talents fit?'"

In other words, at that time, I didn't know what made me unique. I didn't understand where I fit in the big picture of God's plan for the universe. I didn't know how to go deeper within myself and connect with a more profound truth. As explained in There Is More Inside, "One day God spoke to my heart and made it clear that everyone has a divine appointment. There are people who need you. They need to feel and experience your personality and style. There are people that no one can touch in just the way that you can. They are assigned to you and you are assigned to them. Regardless of your passion or how many people are doing what you love to do, if you capture the dream and turn your dream into a vision, you will manifest the movie in your mind."

That was a turning point for me. "I was inspired to look at my book and audio tape shelf, which is overflowing with various successful self-help authors. At that moment, I realized that each author and motivational speaker had left an imprint on my life. The impact wasn't the same; however, for every author. I realize that, like them, God had made provisions for my success and your success. At that point, I had two options. I could either accept the truth that my soul was telling me and take action or I could continue to debate the point within myself and do nothing. How about you, what are you going to do?

Copyrights © 2007 by S. Renee Smith All rights reserved. No part of this article may be copied or reproduced without the written permission by the author. To contact the writer go to www.srenee.com. S. Renee is an Image Consultant, Motivational Speaker, Columnist & Author of There Is More Inside.